Music composed by Jeff Broadbent

Developed by Epic Games, Fortnite is a global cultural phenomenon and one of the most successful video games in history. The game is a vibrant, fast-paced "battle royale" where players compete to be the last person or team standing.

Beyond its core gameplay, it serves as a massive virtual social hub, hosting live in-game concerts and major brand collaborations. Since its launch in 2017, Fortnite has amassed a staggering 650 million registered players worldwide, with over 110 million active users engaging monthly.

The game's massive critical and commercial success has been recognized with numerous industry accolades, including multiple wins for Best Ongoing Game and Best Multiplayer Game at the prestigious Game Awards.

Jeff Broadbent composed music for the Season 7, Chapter 3 finale. Set on the newly reformed "Shattered Coast" island, Fortnite Chapter 7, Season 3 delivers a high-stakes storyline centered around survival, speed, and shifting alliances. Following a cataclysmic battle where the heroic Foundation was frozen in ice by the Ice King, and Agent Jones was left comatose, the legendary Doctor Slone and Singularity must make an uneasy alliance to stabilize a rapidly decaying Zero Point.

Jeff comments: "The finale for Season 7, Chapter 3 begins with the protagonists making an effort to claim the Zero Point, a glowing orb of great power. I wanted the music to express a sense of their hope and optimism, and I composed a variation of the original Zero Point theme to convey this. Noble french horns and soaring strings give a sense of purpose and strength."

"Later, as the nemesis Nemo attempts to take control of the Zero Point, the music shifts to darker tones, incorporating aggressive synthesizers, piercing brass instruments, massive percussion, and modern effects to represent his software hacking attempts. The music gradually builds to an intense climax, when the heroes realize, this time, that Nero has prevailed."
